

But although volunteers aren't paid ... there is a need for funding to do the work – the average income per group for last year was £24,000 though nearly half of the groups got by on less than £5,000. There are many sources of funding..

.. but groups remain heavily reliant on grants, which are becoming less certain...

Resilient funding for community woodland groups is urgently required if their contribution to the well-being of Wales is to be secure. What might this look like?

Social responsibility?

Collaborative enterprise?

Payment for services?

If you can help then please contact Llais y Goedwig ...

Information derived from report "Economics of community woodlands in Wales prepared for Llais y Goedwig and funded by Welsh Government and Woodland Trust. The full report will be available in September 2017.